As wonderful as holidays are, they can be full of stress for today’s busy families. Many of us continue holiday traditions that we either don’t enjoy or that create more work and anxiety than they are worth. This may be the year to start some new family traditions that better fit your budget, calendar and lifestyle.

Examine holiday traditions from your childhood. What did you like/dislike? Ask family members (old and young) what they like and dislike about the holidays.

Brainstorm a list of traditions, write down the “good and bad” about each one and how you might modify it. For example, if sending holiday cards is a hassle and no longer enjoyable, opt to phone a few friends instead.

Create a list of traditions that you and other family members could be in charge of. Share the load and ask for help.

Share your thoughts with other family members and get their buy-in. For example, serving a breakfast or brunch with extended family members may free you up to spend more quality time with your immediate family.

Build in time for quiet conversation and relaxation during the holidays.

Many of us have experienced a holiday season where the bills lasted much longer than the holiday cheer. Your job as a financially responsible consumer is to make a holiday budget that fits your personal situation.

Make a holiday budget, set reasonable limits and stick to those limits. Start by making a comprehensive list of all the holiday extras and their estimated cost. This will include decorations, new clothes, food, gifts, travel, charitable contributions, and any other holiday items. Set realistic spending amounts for each category.

Avoid debt! If you are already carrying credit card balances, adding to those balances can be very expensive. Consider the following if you are thinking of “charging” holiday expenses on credit cards:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Credit Card Balance</th>
<th>Monthly Payment</th>
<th>Annual % Rate</th>
<th>Time to Pay</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>$1,000</td>
<td>$100</td>
<td>12%</td>
<td>11 months</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>$5,000</td>
<td>$200</td>
<td>12%</td>
<td>29 months</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>$5,000</td>
<td>$100</td>
<td>12%</td>
<td>72 months</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

We've all seen them. Many of us may even have them. What are they? Those little bottles of hand sanitizer that are so convenient they fit easily into a purse or pocket.

The question is - are hand sanitizers really as effective as we think they are?

Hand sanitizers must be FDA approved and, if used properly, can eliminate up to 99.9% of microorganisms (viruses & bacteria) on hands.

Be careful, however; don’t let that sweet smelling liquid in the tiny little bottle lull you into a false sense of security. Hand sanitizers ARE NOT a substitute for proper handwashing. Sanitizers are designed to be used after handwashing as an added weapon against germs; they do not, however, remove dirt and other debris from the skin.

Using a hand sanitizer on dirty hands reduces the sanitizer's effectiveness. The dirt and oils on the skin pose as barriers, protecting the bacteria on the hands and reducing the ability of the sanitizer to do its intended job.

The moral of the story is this: hand sanitizers are not a substitute for good handwashing practices. However, if running water and soap are not available, using sanitizers alone is the next best thing.
